

Catalyst of analysis.

BETTER INPUT. CLEARER DECISIONS.

A standalone identity for turning thoughtful analysis into a clear next move.

01 / STRATEGIC THESIS

Thought is not the problem.

Thought without a threshold is.

DecisionInvitation gives analysis a purpose: frame the question, invite perspectives separately, and expose what is sufficient to move. The owner keeps the responsibility.

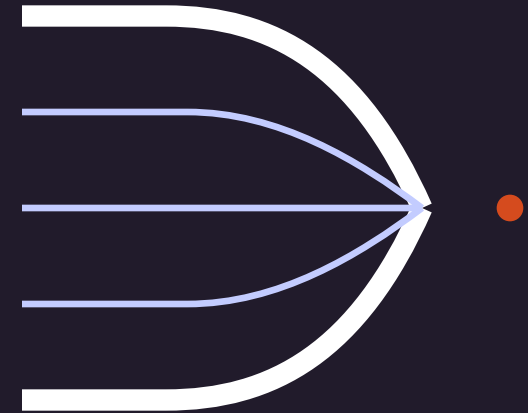

02 / POSITIONING

A decision instrument.

Not a poll. Not consensus theater. Not a corporate memo.

For people responsible for a consequential choice, DecisionInvitation turns distributed judgment into a legible next move.

03 / VERBAL CORE

Language with momentum.

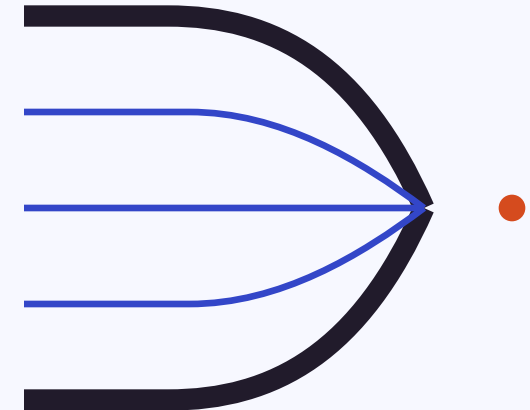

Keep the first-page language. Build the identity around its tension.

Catalyst of analysis.

Better input. Clearer decisions.

A quieter way to decide.

Ask separately. Decide clearly.

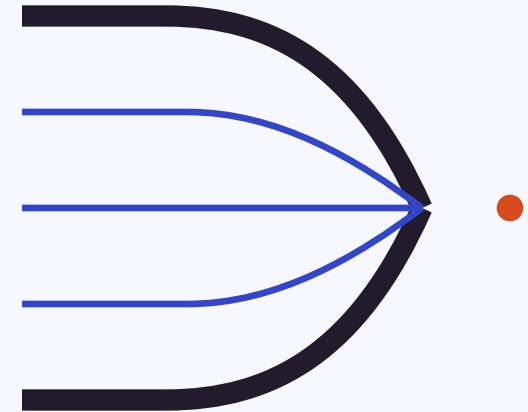

04 / BRAND CHARACTER

Exact. Calm. Decisive.

Clarity without coldness; confidence without coercion.

Use short sentences, concrete verbs, and visible responsibility. Never imply that the system decides, guarantees consensus, or removes accountability.

05 / LOGO IDEA

The Multipath D.

Recognition through convergence.

Five independent inputs begin on one invisible axis and resolve at a single decision point. The aligned openings let the eye complete the missing D spine. A separate lowercase i carries one orange provenance dot.

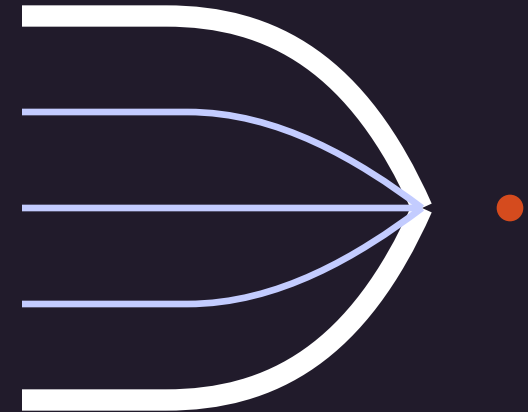

06 / LOGO SYSTEM

Built for recognition.

One master, one micro cut, four colorways.

Use the supplied vectors. Primary is Register with Periwinkle paths and an orange i dot. One-color applications preserve hierarchy through weight. Never redraw or decorate it.

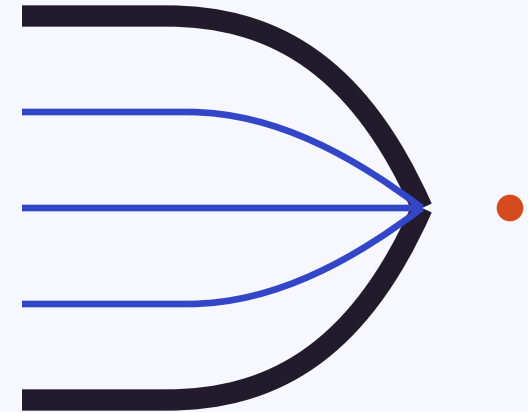

07 / CLEAR SPACE AND SCALE

Give the decision room.

Clear space equals 32 source units.

Master mark: 24 px minimum. Micro mark: 16 px minimum. Lockup: 144 px minimum. At small sizes use the micro cut; never reduce the orange i dot below two device pixels.

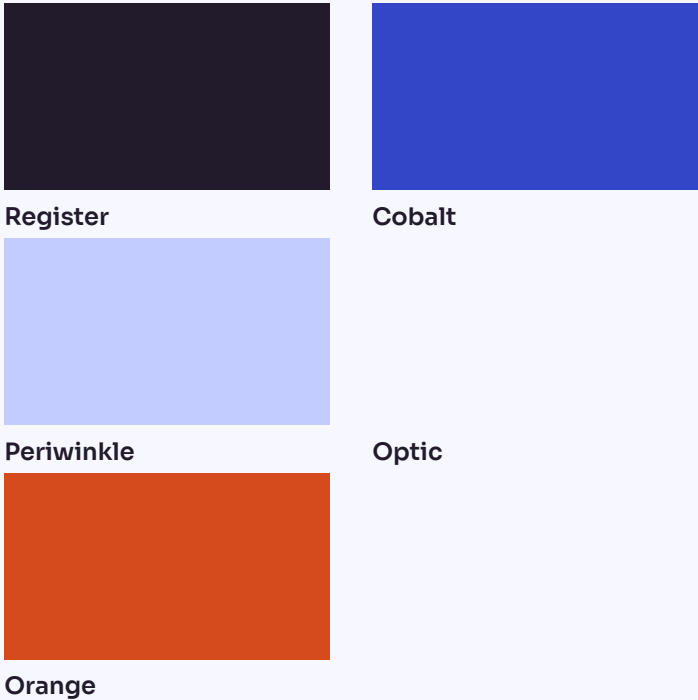

08 / COLOR

A cool instrument panel.

Cobalt creates active structure. Register carries authority.

Optic is the working surface. Periwinkle separates fields. White opens space. Orange is lineage only: no buttons, backgrounds, charts, or status semantics; maximum 2% of a composition.

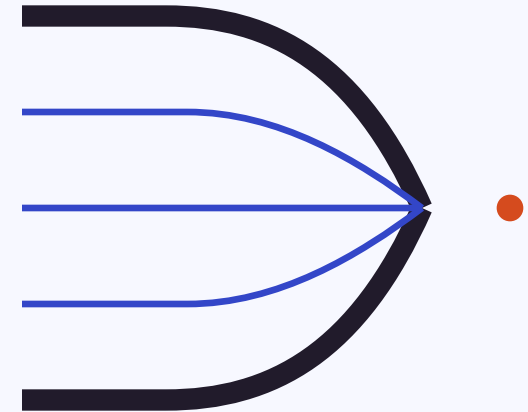

09 / TYPOGRAPHY

One family. One voice.

Sora creates a technical humanism distinct from the parent brand.

Use Regular for reading and large statements. Use SemiBold for the wordmark, navigation, labels, and decisive emphasis. Avoid all-caps paragraphs, faux italics, and decorative tracking.

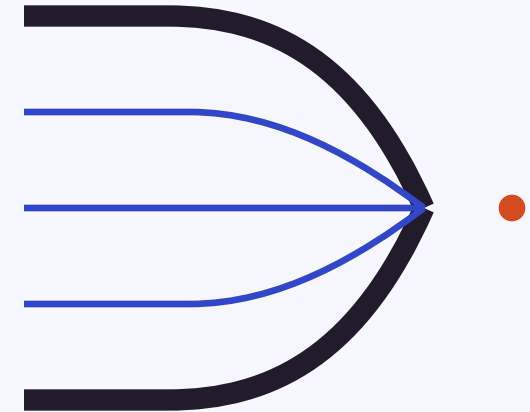

10 / GRAPHIC GRAMMAR

Paths. Counters. Evidence.

The system should feel like information becoming actionable.

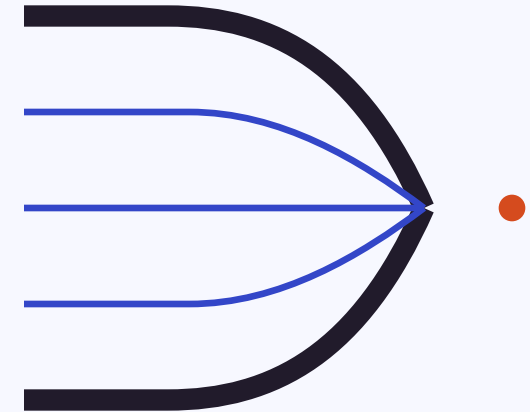

Use fine analytical paths inside strong structural fields. Keep the D silhouette dominant, corners exact, and hierarchy legible. No gradients, floating cards, blobs, or editorial chapter-number theater.

Split the field with purpose.

Use asymmetric planes, hard alignment, and generous empty space.

A typical composition reserves 58% for the question and 42% for the commitment field. Break the ratio only to improve comprehension, never for decoration.

12 / VOICE

Invite, then clarify.

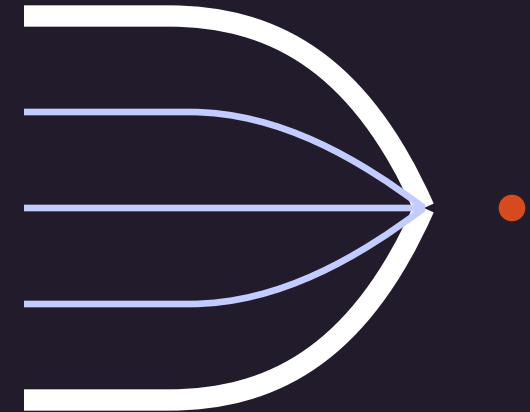

Warm enough to answer. Exact enough to trust.

Preferred: Invite the perspectives. Keep the responsibility.

Avoid: Let AI make the decision.

Preferred: Here is what would change the call.

Avoid: Everyone agrees.

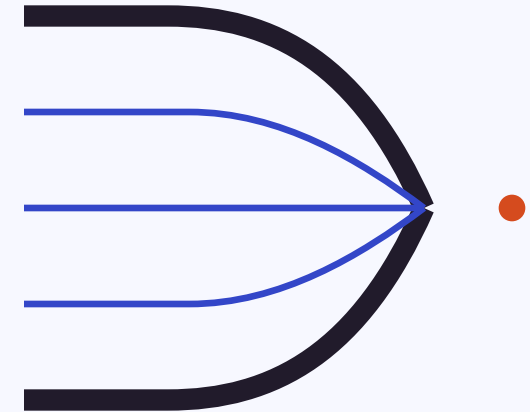

13 / PRODUCT MOMENTS

Show the decision state.

Every message answers: what is asked, why me, who can see it, what happens next?

Use real workflow language and explicit privacy boundaries. A completed invitation is not a completed decision. A recommendation is not authorization.

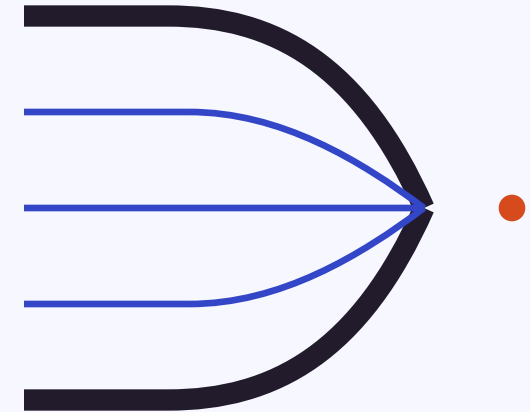

14 / MOTION

Paths, then signature.

Motion explains the system rather than decorating it.

Internal paths settle independently over 260 ms;
the D remains fixed; the orange i dot appears last.
Respect reduced-motion by showing the final state with no transition.

Standalone first. Provenance last.

DecisionInvitation is the visible product brand.

Use “an aSUKIra company” only in legal, about, or footer contexts. Never co-lock the marks. Never borrow the parent palette, typography, voice structure, or signature composition.
